

- Colorado’s Child Welfare practice is trending toward serving more children in their homes.
- The percentage of children being served in their homes without placement has increased from 55% of all children who achieved permanency in 2007 to 60% in 2014.
- The percentage of children who exited to permanency by emancipation or adoption has decreased since 2007.
- In 2014, 90% of the children served remained home or were reunified with their families.

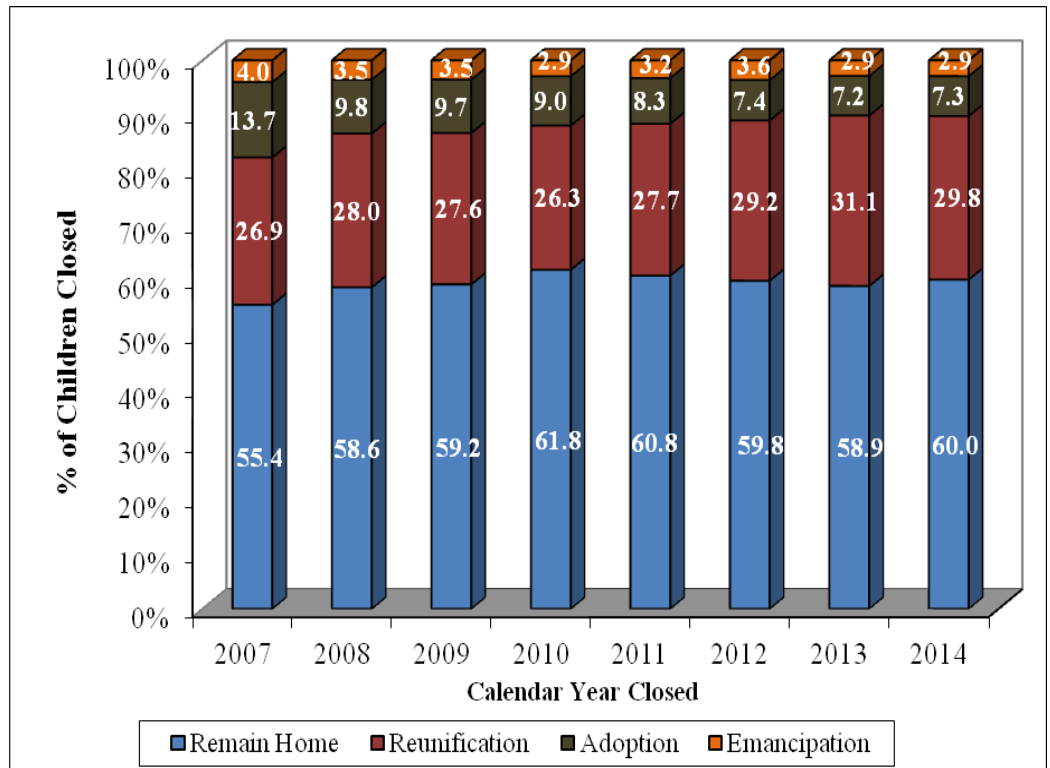

PERMANENCY OUTCOMES FOR CHILDREN

The table below indicates permanency outcomes that can be achieved for children served in child welfare cases: children can remain safely at home while receiving services, be reunified with their families, be adopted if parental rights are terminated by the courts, or emancipate from out-of-home care.

The trend in Colorado’s child welfare practice is to gear more services toward protecting children in their home and avoiding entry into out-of-home placement whenever possible. Over the last 7 years, the percentage of children being served in the home with their parents has increased from 55.4 % of all cases closed in 2007 to 60.0% of all cases closed in 2014. 90% of the children closed from a case in 2014 remained home or were reunified with their families.

The percentage of children emancipating from foster care has decreased from 4.0% of total children closed in 2007 to 2.9% of children closed in 2014, while the number of closures resulting from adoptions has decreased from 13.7% to 7.3% in that same timeframe.

Permanency Outcomes for Children Served – Calendar Years 2007 to 2014

Source: Trails child closure / ending residence data